Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The University of Colorado in War Time Soon after the United States entered the war the universities and colleges throughout the country were confronted by a grave situation. Large numbers of students enlisted, many members of the faculties engaged in various branches of war service, and many of the institutions which depend largely upon tuition found their incomes depleted. The part which universities were to play in the great drama was not foreseen and a perplexing condition existed in the domain of higher education. Some institutions even contemplated closing for the period of the war, but saner views soon prevailed and it became evident to college presidents, regents, and faculties that the universities could be made powerful agencies to assist the government of the United States. This assistance could be rendered by aiding at the council board, by helping the public to obtain a more intelligent idea of the European situation and of the reasons for the entry of the United States into the war, and in many other ways. The University of Colorado faced...
